PAINT TIP
Keep your brush or roller wet between coats by wrapping it in a clean plastic bag.

ART SPACE

With two talented artists and a lot of paint, we created a one-off set for our fashion shoot

If you think that being on a two-and-a-half day Fashion Quarterly shoot sounds a bit like watching paint dry, we'd like to tell you that's not usually how we roll. But we went to extra lengths to bring you our 'Wet Paint' swimwear editorial on page 88 of our art issue.

The day before the shoot, team FQ rolled up their sleeves and got to work prepping the walls of the Bauer photo studio with Resene SpaceCote Flat paint in both Resene White and Resene Black. Once those coats were dry, the studio was ready for artists Andrew J. Steel and Damir Radford-Scott (D-side) to create the very clever set and props for our knockout swimwear spread. When the shoot wrapped, we rolled up our sleeves again and set about returning the studio to its former self. By then, we were painting pros - more Resene SpaceCote Flat in Resene White and our art director's paint-flecked Raf Simons blazer later, no trace of art remained. ■

Top: Damir Radford-Scott (D-side), aka Milarky, on the set of the shoot with Liv and the production team. Left: Andrew J. Steel lends his creative talent as he plays with ideas for our cover. Below: Damir takes a blow dryer to the Resene paint he's applied to a screen - meanwhile, the rest of the team stands by as paint dries.

We used Resene SpaceCote Flat Black and Resene White for our 'Wet Paint' shoot (page 88). To create artfully styled walls at home with Resene paints (resene.co.nz), visit Resene ColorShops and selected resellers.

Leather and lace met Perspex and paint when Fashion Quarterly teamed up with Andrew J. Steel and Damin Radford-Scott (D-side) for their final project as art duo, BMD. Take inspiration from our collaboration and get graphic with punchy pieces and make-your-mark styling.
