Rotorua Color Shop Opens

Resene's new Colour Shop in Rotorua features a special-purpose bulk loading bay for contractors along with an extensive retail area for paints and a variety of other wall coverings.

Resene's presence in Sulphur City, heart of New Zealand's geothermal wonderland, underlines the company's objective of serving the fast-developing tourist industry with its full range of paints and services.

Comments Colour Shop Rotorua Manager Jeff Wilson: "We are the one-stop-shop for industrial clients and for home owners."

Selwyn Collins and Allan Carswell load up from Resene Color Shop's bulk bay. Selwyn is one of the best-known contractors in the Rotorua region after nearly 20 years in business. Allan served his apprenticeship with Selwyn and the two contractors are major users of Resene Paints. Assisting the contractors is Tony Taylor of Resene Paints.

Jill Ford Joins as Specifying Rep

Jill Ford has joined Resene Paints as a specifying representative. A graduate of Nottingham University, Great Britain, Jill came to New Zealand in 1980 and subsequently taught at Mana College and Wellington East Girls.

An interest in design took her into the surface coatings industry first with Taubmans and now with Resene Paints.

"There is a great deal of interest in Resene," comments Jill. "There is always a stream of people calling up wanting news and advice about Resene products and applications."

Architecture Exposition ends nationwide Tour

The Resene Paints Architecture Exposition has ended after touring Auckland, Christchurch, and Wellington. Known as Tabula Rasa — clean slate — the exposition was designed to give young architects an opportunity to expose their ideas to members of the architectural profession and also members of the public.

The response by members of the public indicated that there was widespread interest in the exposition. This was particularly evident during the Exposition's display at Turnbull House, Wellington, where it attracted a large number of viewers from the general public.

The winner of the Exposition was Roger Fairey, a graduate of the Auckland School of Architecture. His winning entry was a modernistic interpretation of the traditional New Zealand Villa.

Adjudicator Ross Jenner described the entry as in the mainstream of New Zealand architecture, yet throwing new light on the popular objective of configuring the road, the house and garden, using the house as the linkage between the two.

Mr Jenner described the winning entry as fulfilling and enhancing many of the aspirations of the New Zealand home owner.

University

A free-style exposition by members of the Victoria University School of Architecture at the School of Architecture. The exposition involved the construction and colouring of a variety of objects and masks.

relied for its colour on Resene Paints. "It is the paint we always use" commented the School's Chief Technician Ross Grant. "It gives good surfaces and it is easy to apply."

The exposition at Victoria University was presented by first year students at the School of Architecture. It was part of the continuing series of attractions presented by the university at its newly covered-in main campus Quadrant.

Known as the Changing of the Chair, the event marks the accession of a new chairperson

Major Palmerston North commercial buildings coated with Resene

Resene Paints Colour Shop in Palmerston North has this year supplied paint for two of the largest new buildings in the Manawatu. The company's products were used exclusively on Palmerston North's huge new Foodtown and also on the new Arlidge Brothers market complex in the city.

Both these new buildings reflect the strong growth in construction in Palmerston North and the Manawatu. "Our presence in Palmerston North with our entire range of paints means that we can offer a full consulting and product service," comments Luanne Gooch of Resene, Palmerston North.
